Conference and Exhibition
Centre (FIBES)

MMH reaches its third edition, which confirms the importance of mining as a driver of economic growth, becoming a strategic sector for the creation of employment and wealth. By means of this meeting, Europe aims to position itself in the world as a reference for the international mining industry, by offering companies a trade networking space and providing professionals with a discussion forum to share experiences and generate knowledge. In this third edition, that knowledge focuses on technological trends in mining. The human being has been developing the mining activity for many centuries during which techniques have been improved and efficiency as well as sustainability have been gradually increased. We have left behind that image linked to an environmentally unfriendly industry. Extraction companies and their complementary industrial sector make major investments in improving all the processes in order to fully integrate mining within the environment and society, without ignoring research, so important to achieve progress in new areas such as underwater or asteroid mining. Mining is a strategic engine for development for any country that has this kind of resources which, additionally, can be of different and diverse types. Taking that into account, we have designed a new concept of MMH, one which expands our scope under a new name: Mining and Minerals Hall. World Mining Meeting in Europe. Thus, apart from metallic, we embrace other minerals such as arid, ornamental stone and, particularly, industrial minerals. In fact, the mining production value almost reaches 3 billion euros in Spain, generating around 100.000 direct jobs in some 2.900 mining sites. Furthermore, in Europe, not including fossils, total production is 225 million tons. Mining plays, therefore, an outstanding role in our continent.

“In Spain, it generates around 100.000 jobs in some 2.900 mining sites”

That is what we want to reflect in this MMH new edition. What is more, as a relevant sector in many countries' economies, we also deem it necessary for society to know the mining industry's actual reality, committed to sustainability and innovation. We must be transparent too in our actions in order for the citizens to trust and support the different projects carried out in their environments. To accomplish that, the relationships created among companies, public institutions and universities are essential. And Mining and Minerals Hall is the proper to develop those relationships.
